Eight centuries of reports ... (Card 2)
There are actually very few Exchequer cases among them, and they would come more appropriately, perhaps, under the head of King's bench reports. The book is more like an abridgement than like an ordinary volume of reports, most of the cases being taken from other reports. The word centuries is not used here in its chronological meaning, but indicates that the cases are grouped by hundreds. cf. Book. Lawyer's ref. manual, 1884.

A few of the papers are in French.

"The series of these most important political and other documents commences in 1508, but papers of earlier date than the reign of Elizabeth are comparatively few. For the reigns of Elizabeth and James I., however, they constitute a body of state papers illustrative of general events and political transactions, with which the state papers preserved in the Public record office are also comparable."—Roberts, R. "Became an active organization under John and received its definitive shape and system in the early part of the reign of Henry III ... As a financial body, it almost rivalled the exchequer ... As an administrative department, it encroached largely on the sphere of the chancery."

Heads of the department were called clerks, keepers, or treasurers ... The controller of the wardrobe was the official next in importance ...

Subordinate departments were the Great wardrobe, the Wardrobe of the household, and the Privy wardrobe. (cf. Treatise in English historical review, v. 24, 1908, p. 496-505, and Seagill-Bird, Guide to the public records, 3d ed., 1908, p. 246-247)
